IAAF claps for itself after 'best event'

But little interest, warm weather tell a different story about Doha 2019

Doha - A successful world athletics championships had looked like a desert mirage, but the event eventually came to life with an oasis of thrills and packed houses to rescue Qatari organisers and officials before the curtain came down on Sunday.

Struggling due to a lack of interest from locals, the 10-day showcase delivered on the final weekend as criticism over an empty stadium and stifling heat of around 38 degrees Celsius was replaced by an atmosphere at last worthy of a world event.

The athletes responded with memorable performances in the air-conditioned Khalifa Stadium, with temperatures kept at 21 degrees.

The United States again topped the medals table, their 14 golds almost triple the next best of Kenya on five, while Jamaica and China each had three. No other nation got more than two.

"It is pretty clear to us that on athlete performance this is the best world championships we have had," said International Association of Athletics Federations (IAAF) chief Sebastian Coe.

The head of the global governing body had spent a good amount of time during the opening days vigorously defending the decision to bring the championships to the Middle East.

"It is the athletes themselves who have come here better prepared for a championship that will be remembered for a long time.... maybe in a large part to the almost perfect conditions that these guys have created in the stadium."

Before the last three sessions, a nearby super mall with its shops, ice rink and amusement park had generated more buzz than the Khalifa Stadium with its swathes of empty seats.

The warning signs came early when the blue riband 100 metres on the opening weekend did not attract even a modest audience.

American Christian Coleman's win was greeted with a smattering of polite applause, while Jamaica's Shelly-Ann Fraser-Pryce did a victory lap in a near-empty stadium with her sleepy son nestled in her arms.

Qatar has shown huge interest in hosting the world's biggest sporting parties, including the 2022 soccer World Cup finals, but has displayed little desire to actually attend them.

The crowds over the final three days were as manufactured as the stadium, with organisers giving away thousands of tickets to clubs and immigrant workers although the excitement was real.

While track and field athletes competing in Khalifa Stadium did so in air-conditioned comfort, there was plenty of suffering and complaining on the Doha roads.

Marathoners and race walkers were forced to run at midnight along a soulless, almost spectator-less route to avoid the worst of the extreme heat and humidity. - Reuters
