Wise Water Use

Save it, or do without it!

Water and Sanitation Minister, Nomvula Mokonyane, has called on citizens to use water sparingly and responsibly, because climate change has exacerbated the drought situation in the country. The country is currently experiencing the worst drought in 23 years.

The Minister also called on local government and those responsible for managing water to lead communities in using water wisely.

“South Africa is a water scarce country with highly variable rainfall and water runoff. To mitigate this situation, pro-active and responsive risk management, coupled with innovative water security management interventions are required,” said the Minister, who added that there was no substitute for the resource.

She explained that 98% of the water in the country has already been supplied and it has to be reused. South Africa has had to draw some of the water from Lesotho.

Drought conditions are being experienced across the country due to prolonged lower-than-normal rainfall since the beginning of the year, and this has led to water shortages in a number of public water supply schemes or dams. “The drought currently affects 173 of the 1 628 water supply schemes nationally, serving approximately 2.7 million households or 18% of the national population,” she said.

Farewell to PMU Manager, Nthabiseng Ndlovu

From the well wishes she received from colleagues at her farewell event, one thing is very clear: Nthabiseng Ndlovu is well loved and appreciated within Lephalale Municipality. Her positive contribution to the Municipality since she started as PMU Manager in August 2012 is undeniable. It is the passion with which she works that ensured that LLM spent 99% of its MIG grant in 2014/2015. Many projects have come to fruition because of Nthabiseng's capable guidance as PMU Manager. All who attended her farewell on Friday, 30 October will agree: Nthabiseng will surely be missed.
